Bicentennial Event!

(Chairman's note: One of the best things about the American people, is their ability to poke fun at their own selves. The following article is taken from the June 11 edition of NAVY TIMES newspaper. Its re-publication is presented by the local Bicentennial Commission in a strictly "light-hearted" view of the events surrounding the celebrations of the Nation's 200th birthday.)

By Bruce Callander

Knowing that he felt the Bicentennial people had slighted colonial aviation, we were surprised to find Colonel Flakbait bubbling with enthusiasm for the nation's birthday plans. We thought he was down on the bicentennial business, we said.

"Changed my mind," said Col. Maxwell Arnold Flakbait, USAF (Ret.). "I've decided it's our big chance."

For what?

"To shape up these raunchy civilians."

Which ones?

"The whole lot. I never noticed until I retired how disorganized and undisciplined American civilians are."

Really ragged are they?

"Disgraceful. Just as a little example, I can't tell you how many motels I've been in where the beds were made so sloppy you couldn't bounce a quarter off them for anything.

"Then, if you call in the chambermaids for a little orientation on bedmaking, they think you're some kind of nut or worse."

And the bicentennial effort should improve good order and discipline in the civilian ranks?

"Has to," said the old warrior. "They've got somebody over at Headquarters who knows what he's doing."

Headquarters?

"American Revolution Bicentennial Administration," said Flakbait impatiently. "Congress put them in charge of the whole show and they've got it on the right track. You have to get a license from them or you don't celebrate. Good thinking. You don't want every Tom, Dick and Harry doing any fool thing he wants to.

"Look here. I've got a list of the companies they have licensed to make things. Here's an outfit with rights to print official bumper stickers. Great idea. Get all those smutty sayings off people's cars.

"And here's another. Official men's sportshirts. I wondered when somebody was going to regulate those things. One good government-issue sport shirt will go a long way toward getting some uniformity in the ranks.

"And here's one licensed to make official flags 'for purchase by authorized users only.' About time. I wondered when they were going to stop letting any kook who wanted one buy a flag. As a minimum, they ought to make'em show a birth certificate and a note from a reputable patriotic organization."

We hated to break it to him, but it was only fair to the Bicentennial people. Our understanding, we said, was that the Bicentennial Administration was only licensing commemorative items - souvenirs and such.

The licensed items carry the Bicentennial symbol (a little star made of red, white and blue lines) and the words: "Officially recognized commemorative of the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration." That's all.

"It doesn't mean that civilians have to buy only the regulation stuff?" the colonel asked sadly.

They can buy anything they want, we said.

Flakbait seemed crushed.

"I thought it was too good to be true," he said. Then he brightened a little. "Still," he said, "maybe I can get to them and have them tighten up just a little. Say that we licensed all the barbers so they could only give the official Bicentennial haircut. That's a start, anyway."

We asked if he had a particular hair style in mind.

"I'm going to surprise you," the colonel said. "You probably think I'd want everybody in a really short GI cut. Well, I'm not hardnosed at all.

"I'd leave a lot of leeway for personal preference. Just so the hair was no more than three-quarters of an inch long and the neck was shaved and there were no sideburns."

We agreed that was pretty liberal, but, we said, all the Revolutionary paintings we'd seen showed people of the period with hair that was a good deal longer. Wouldn't that be more appropriate to the Bicentennial?

"Ah," said the colonel smugly. "That's that fuzzy thinking again. Reason it out. They have Bicentennial bumper stickers. Right? Well, those colonials didn't have VWs to put'em on, did they? Same with the haircuts. They wore contemporary hair styles. So we make contemporary hair styles mandatory. Today's contemporary hair styles."

And what, we wondered, would be consider contemporary hair styles for today?

"They would be," he said thoughtfully, "whatever the government duly constituted by the majority of the citizens of the Republic orders. That's what democracy is."

We always dislike to disagree with the colonel because it makes his neck turn disturbing colors, but we had to say it.

The idea of the Bicentennial we suggested, seemed to be to celebrate both national and individual freedom. We didn't think people would consider it appropriate to celebrate by giving up some of their independence.

The colonel's neck took on a distressing hue that spread to his ears and forehead, but his voice was calm when he said, "The price of liberty is eternal vigilance and a decent haircut."

What did that mean?

"I don't know," he admitted. "I just said it until I could think of something else. The haircuts aren't a big thing in themselves, you understand. It's the principle. Fuzzy hair leads to fuzzy thinking. Lot of that going around.

"The thing is that the armed forces have to draw from the civilian ranks for their members. So the civilians ought to keep shaped up and ready. You relax your vigilance about haircuts and such and next thing you know something happens and you have to pull some people in and what do you have? Some ragtag and bobtail outfit that couldn't get anywhere in a fight."

We seemed to recall, we said, that the Minutemen gave a good account of themselves and they were pretty ragged compared with the British regulars.

"Just my point," said Flakbait, completely recovered from his momentary confusion. "Ever see those British with their hats off? Hair halfway down their backs. Half their officers in wigs even.

"We're getting that kind of thing creeping into our own services, you know. Men want to wear wigs. They catch those ideas from the civilians, of course.

"Well, let'em remember what happened to those long-haired, bewigged British, I say. Clean-cut American lads whipped'em every time."

We knew from long acquaintance with the colonel when to stop disputing his irrefutable logic. The time had come.

PREVENT FARM ACCIDENTS

DON'T BE A STATISTIC,
CHECK YOUR FARM
FOR SAFETY HAZARDS
TODAY!...

Most farm accidents can be avoided if a little time is taken to remove obstructions, fill hazardous field depressions and check machinery for unsafe operating conditions. Safe farming conditions are as much a part of farming as cultivating or planting. Don't gamble with chance, remove the cause of an accident promptly!

He says "The people are being crushed by unelected administrators who have never read the laws that they administer. Administrators are, instead, implementing rules and regulations formulated in Regional Capitols . . . which rules and regulations bypass the restraints of our Congressional law system."

Nelson A. Pryor, executive director of the Center for Federal Policy Review, Washington, and a former New Hampshire state representative, will speak on "Growing Federal Controls Over Our Lands, Water, Homes - The Tyranny of Regionalism." at a meeting of Citizens for Responsible Legislation and Constitutional Government Saturday, June 28, 1975 at 3 p.m. in the Ruritan Building, Monroe (1.7 mile north of Monroe post office, right on #29, driving northward).

Mr. Pryor organized the Center for Federal Policy Review, which has 21 autonomous state affiliates made up of businessmen, housewives, professional men, educators and individuals working for the right of self-government and opposed to unlimited government. Members believe that regionalism's thrust into government at all levels today threatens to make serfs of the people again.

As a national authority on regionalism, Mr. Pryor has spoken from Maine to California, from Wisconsin to Florida. Formerly an American history teacher for six years, he received citations of merit including the Congress of Freedom Liberty Award. A graduate of Bicker College, Houlton, Maine, he later received a master of arts degree from the University of Maine in Orono. He is a member of the American Legion and the Masons.

A question period will follow Mr. Pryor's talk, which will be open to the public without charge.

Veterans in Central Virginia Military Retirees and Disabled

Dear Retiree:

1. Greetings from the Steering Commitee of the MRA! We are in the process of organizing a Military Retiree Association in the central Virginia area. We have prepared this newsletter to brief you, as a retiree in our geographical area, on the purpose and goals of this projected organizaiton. We aim:

a. To have a strong voice in legislative matters, concerning military retirees (both at the state and national level);

b. to assist in the dissemination of information pertaining to rights, benefits, and privileges to which you, your dependents, or survivors may be entitled by virtue of your military service;

c. to strive to retain such rights and benefits which we rightfully earned and which were granted or promised to us while on active service;

d. to guard and protect ourselves against political forces and private interests who fail to understand the particular situation of the military retirees and disabled veterans;

e. to promote support and understanding in our local community.

2. We solicit your support, your ideas, your suggestions and your recommendations. We plan to have an educational presentation (time and place to be announced at a later date) concerning the Champus Program and VA benefits. Wives will be welcomed to this event.

3. Additional programs will be planned for the interest of all concerned once we are able to evaluate the degree of interest on the projected events. We hope to attract our congressional representatives and state delegates to come and "rap" with us.

4. We encourage you to join us in this common effort. There are no membership fees or charges planned. However, you may have a chance to make small contributions for coffee and postage service. The Central Virginia Community College has graciously offered their facilities in support of our effort. We certainly appreciate this gesture.

5. We do not have the names and addresses of all of those retirees and disabled veterans who might be interested in joining and supporting us. Will you please help us by writing a line with any comments or names and addresses of friends who would be eligible for membership?

You may write c/o:
Veterans Affairs Office
Central Virginia Community College
Atten: Mr. Kerns (or Mr. Penichc)
Lynchburg, VA 24502
Telephone 239-0321 ext. 271

Again, we encourage you to write or to call or visit the Office of Veterans Affairs at Central Virginia Community College.
